CARDINAL CELEBRATES MASS

Host of Prelates and Priests, Many in Tears, Gather in New York to Pay Respects to Their Beloved—Archbishop Ryan Delivers the Sermon.

NEW YORK, May 9.—The funeral of the late Most Rev. Michael Augustine Corrigan, D. D., Archbishop of New York, was held in St. Patrick's Cathedral at 10:30 o'clock today. The presence of a cardinal, of more than a score of bishops, of more than a thousand priests, and of a mourning multitude of lay churchmen and women lent a profound impressiveness to the solemn ceremonies of the church. The occasion was memorable both for its solemn splendor and for its spontaneous tribute of grief for the death of a great priest and a remarkable man.

Throng Gather Early.
A large throng had gathered at the cathedral when the doors were opened at 9 o'clock this morning. The first mass was said by Father Lavelle at that hour, and other masses were said in rapid succession until 10 o'clock, when the doors of the cathedral were closed, so that preparations for the funeral might be made. Meanwhile the concourse outside was increasing. A cordon of police was formed about the cathedral to keep the crowd from pressing against the doors.

Flooded Into the Cathedral.
At 10 o'clock the small door on the Fifth Avenue front of the cathedral was opened, and the police admitted holders of cards rapidly, one by one. As the mourning throng entered the great edifice the chimes pealed forth. The brilliant May sunshine illumined the colored windows and lighted the graceful marbles of the dome. And there, before the sanctuary, which was dim in shadow, on the catafalque, in his archiepiscopal robes, a jeweled mitre resting on his head, and in his folded hands a golden crucifix, lay the dead prelate, as though peacefully viewing the assembling throng. The catafalque was surrounded with candles, the flames of which in contrast with the sunlight above appeared as spots of gold.

Presently from the great organ were heard the strains of Bistaf's funeral march. The solemn music had not died away when the chimes again pealed forth. At 10:30 the chimes ceased, and the deep-toned bell began to toll. At the moment the great doors were thrown open, letting in a flood of sunshine.

The black draperies on the great columns were wafted up mournfully, and the music of the organ the sacerdotal procession proceeded slowly up the center aisle. First came the altar boys, bearing the crucifix and candles, then a body of Franciscan monks, in their brown robes and rope girdles. The great assemblage of priests, in their black soutanes with white surplices, followed, walking two by two. After them came Dominicans, Jesuits, and Paulists. So large was the number of priests that there was not room for them all in the sanctuary. Chairs were provided for them in the center aisle.

Many Priests in Tears.
On and on, past the catafalque the procession passed, every priest with bowed head and not a few with the tears streaming down their cheeks.

Then, shortly after 11 o'clock, the great doors were closed again, the last of the priests having taken their seats. Through the smaller doors bodies of mourners from various Catholic societies passed up the south and north aisles. Once more the great doors swung wide. Through the doorway came surplined priests and acolytes and then monks in purple stocks and purple-trimmed soutanes and birettas passed up between the white lines. And then, two by two, came the bishops in purple, and then the archbishops in robes of richer tint approaching the cardinal's colors.

The masters of ceremonies and assistant deacons of the mass followed in black vestments and birettas, and then came the deacons, also in black, and between them the most notable figure of all the throng, his eminence Cardinal Gibbons. The cardinal wore the deep red rappa magna and a red biretta and walked with steady step and bowed head past the catafalque to the sanctuary, where he took his seat on the throne erected on the epistle side of the altar. It was draped in purple and faced the black-draped throne on the Gospel side on which the late archbishop had sat for so many years.

The Mass Begun.
After a few moments' rest the cardinal arose and the assistant priests began to robe him for the solemn requiem mass. Then, with the crozier in his hand, he descended and proceeded to the lower step of the high altar, accompanied by the deacons, sub-deacons, assistants and acolytes. The mass was then begun from the organ, presided over by William F. Pecker, came the notes of Cherubini's Requiem Aeternam and Sanctus. Mozart's Ave and his Dominie Jesu Christi followed in order as the mass proceeded with all that wonderful solemnity of the Roman rubric for such an occasion.

Archbishop Ryan's Sermon.
Archbishop Ryan chose as his text: "He sanctified him in his faith and meekness, and chose him out of all flesh. And placed a crown of gold upon his mitre, wherein was engraved holiness, an ornament of honor, a work of power, and delightful to the eyes for his beauty. Therefore, he made to him a covenant of peace, to be the prince of the sanctuary, and of his people, that the dignity of the priest-hood should be to him and to his seed for ever."—Ezekiel xliv, 1-3. He said in part:

"Your eminence, venerable fathers of the episcopate and clergy, and dear brethren of the laity:
"How impressive is the eloquence of silence in this scene, and how salutary in its lessons! Behold before you today a great priest, who in his day pleased God and was found just! Behold him, enshrouded in the garments of his order, as he stood at the altar to offer sacrifice and prayer for you and yours. He preached his last sermon from that funeral pulpit. But yesterday, I may say, he proclaimed the great exhortative Christian truth, which alone can preserve society from socialism and anarchy. 'Behold dead, he yet speaketh' in the eloquence of his great example. This great cardinal, which he did so much to perfect and to adorn, is appropriately draped in mourning for his death. His eminence the cardinal, and see, his brother bishops, to whom he was an example of every episcopal virtue, are here to honor his memory. You, his beloved priests, secular and regular, who had such opportunities to look into the sanctuaries of his heart, are here to bid farewell to your beloved master and model.

Feared High Dignity.

"The archbishop was brave with the courage of God, for whom alone he acted and suffered. His humility seemed to make him timid. I know, from the testimony of Cardinal McCloskey, that he did all in his power to prevent his name from being sent to Rome for the dignity of archbishop of New York. He feared the awful responsibility. So did some of the greatest bishops that ever lived, but when they had to accept the office they became the bravest. So did St. Ambrose, who afterward related the Roman emperor, Theodosius and St. Thomas a Becket, who heaved the anvil of the English king, Henry II. In the combination of gentle modesty and fearless fortitude the Christian bishop should follow his great model, the shepherd and Bishop of our souls, Jesus Christ.

"What, after all, is death to such a man as this? What but a liberation, an illumination, a union! A liberation from most pressing duties and responsibilities, an illumination when the light of God's face shall shine upon him, and he will hold the solutions of the great problems of life, and the reach and breadth and height and depth of God's love, and a union with the divine original, after whom he was formed. 'My spouse, when wilt thou take me to thyself?' was the cry of St. Peter of Alcantara. Oh, eternal and most sacred God, who hast given to thy servant Michael such plenitude of graces and such correspondence with them, grant to those who remain here on earth, that we may benefit by his example, and be united to him in thee, for all eternity, through Christ, our Lord, amen!"

Guard of Honor.

During the celebration of the mass the body was surrounded by a guard of honor of about sixty citizens, among them John D. Cunniff, John H. Spellman, former District Attorney Philbin, and Adrian Iselin. The congregation lingered in their seats for some time after the priests had left. The crowd had become so large that during the service many women fainted and had to be taken into the fresh air.

As soon as the congregation had left the cathedral and the place had been cleared of a death mask of the dead archbishop was placed on the catafalque. The body was accompanied by Bishop McQuaid of Rochester, who pronounced the final absolution. The burial was absolutely private.

him were his adjutant general, Col. Thomas Ward, and the members of his staff. Near General Miles' party were seated the official delegates of the army, consisting of Assistant Secretary of War Sanger, Maj. Gen. S. B. M. Young, and a host of brigadier generals commanding the staff departments of the army. The committee representing the Senate and the House of Representatives were seated behind the members of the Supreme Court. Occupying inside seats to the right of

S. Hamlin, did not deliver any funeral sermon, but recited an eloquent prayer thanking God for having enabled Admiral Sampson to reach great results, for which history had accorded him the honor. Dr. Hamlin ended with the Lord's prayer, in which the congregation joined. Then the quartet sang "O, Paradise" and the services ended with a brief benediction by Dr. Hamlin.

As the casket was carried out the organist played Chopin's Funeral March, the congregation standing meanwhile. None of the others in the assemblage the chancel were Commander Raymond Rodgers, Commander Charles W. Rae, and other officers who served under Admiral Sampson just prior to the war with Spain when he was captain of the battleship Iowa.

A delegation of the Loyal Legion, including Rear Admiral Samuel R. Franklin and John E. Walker, and with them Naval Constructor Richmond P. Holson, who owes his fame to Sampson's favor, had a seat in the body of the church. He was not in uniform, but in civilian dress. The chancel and adjoining deck were literally covered with floral tributes from official bodies, personal friends, and professional associates of Admiral Sampson. Wreaths of lilacs of the valley, orchids, and roses were numerous. President Roosevelt sent a magnificent floral piece. When the casket, covered only by an American union jack, had been placed before the chancel, and the pallbearers and relatives had been seated, the services began with the singing of the hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," by a quartet of members of the navy. Then Mrs. Dorothy Noyes sang "Some Sweet Day Bye-and-Bye" with touching fervor.

The pastor of the church, Rev. Teunis made any move to leave the church until after the members of the Sampson family and President Roosevelt and the official contingent had passed into the street. The President and members of his Cabinet went from the church to the White House.

Crowds Block Sidewalks.

The crowd outside the church had increased greatly while the services were in progress, and the sidewalks, part of the roadway and terraces and windows in the vicinity were filled with people.

With a snuff and a clatter the sailors, marines and cadets composing the funeral escort came to a present as the casket appeared, and the United States Marine Band played, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Then there was more clattering and a scurrying of feet, and the military bodies composing the escort moved off into the streets. With the bands playing dirges, the procession started for the cemetery. A platoon of mounted police headed the procession; then came in sequence Admiral Terry and his staff, the Adjutant General, and the Fourth Field Artillery, the battalion of Naval Cadets, with the Academy Band, a battalion of marines with the Marine Band, and commanded by Major J. N.

Wood, and finally two battalions of seamen from the North Atlantic Squadron, headed by the band from the flagship Olympia. This completed the military procession.

The hearse came next and was followed by the carriages containing the honorary pallbearers, Admiral Sampson's family and relatives, the official delegations, and a number of personal friends. Nearly all the bluejackets were from the flagship Olympia and the battleships Alabama and Kearsarge. They looked bronzed and hearty after their winter's cruise in the West Indies.

Into Virginia.
Through deep lines of spectators standing on each side of Connecticut Avenue the procession passed to K Street and turned westward on K Street, which was also lined with people. All along the city route of the parade great crowds gathered to see the funeral spectacle.

Passing out of K Street around Washington Circle to Pennsylvania Avenue, the column proceeded to M Street, Georgetown, to the Aqueduct Bridge, over it into Virginia, and then to Arlington. As the procession crossed the bridge minute guns were fired from the United States academy and the Washington Navy Yard, Lieut. W. H. Buck commanding.

Arms at "Present."
When the columns arrived at the cemetery two lines facing each other were formed, and between these lines sailors and marines, with arms at "Present," the body was borne to the grave.

Rear Admiral Terry, with his staff, headed the small funeral escort to the grave. This escort consisted of one company of naval cadets and the Marine Band.

The burial ceremonies were simple, consisting of a prayer for the dead, the reading of a psalm, and music. The sailors were fired by the light artillery battery stationed just outside the grounds during the ceremonies. As the last shot was fired a bugler at the head of the open grave sounded "Taps" and the body was lowered to its final resting place.

House Filled With Flowers.

The Sampson home on New Hampshire Avenue was fairly filled with floral tributes. The President sent a beautiful design from the White House conservatory, a member of the Cabinet contributed a magnificent wreath of orchids and lilies. Among the others who sent designs were Lieut. General Miles, Admirals Dewey, Schley, and Taylor, the captain and officers of the battleship, the Loyal Legion, Vickers' Sons & Mather, of London, manufacturers of the battleship, Howard Gould, secretary of the navy, William C. Whitney, besides many Senators and Representatives and others in official life in Washington.
